Boston's Old City Hall

July, 1969

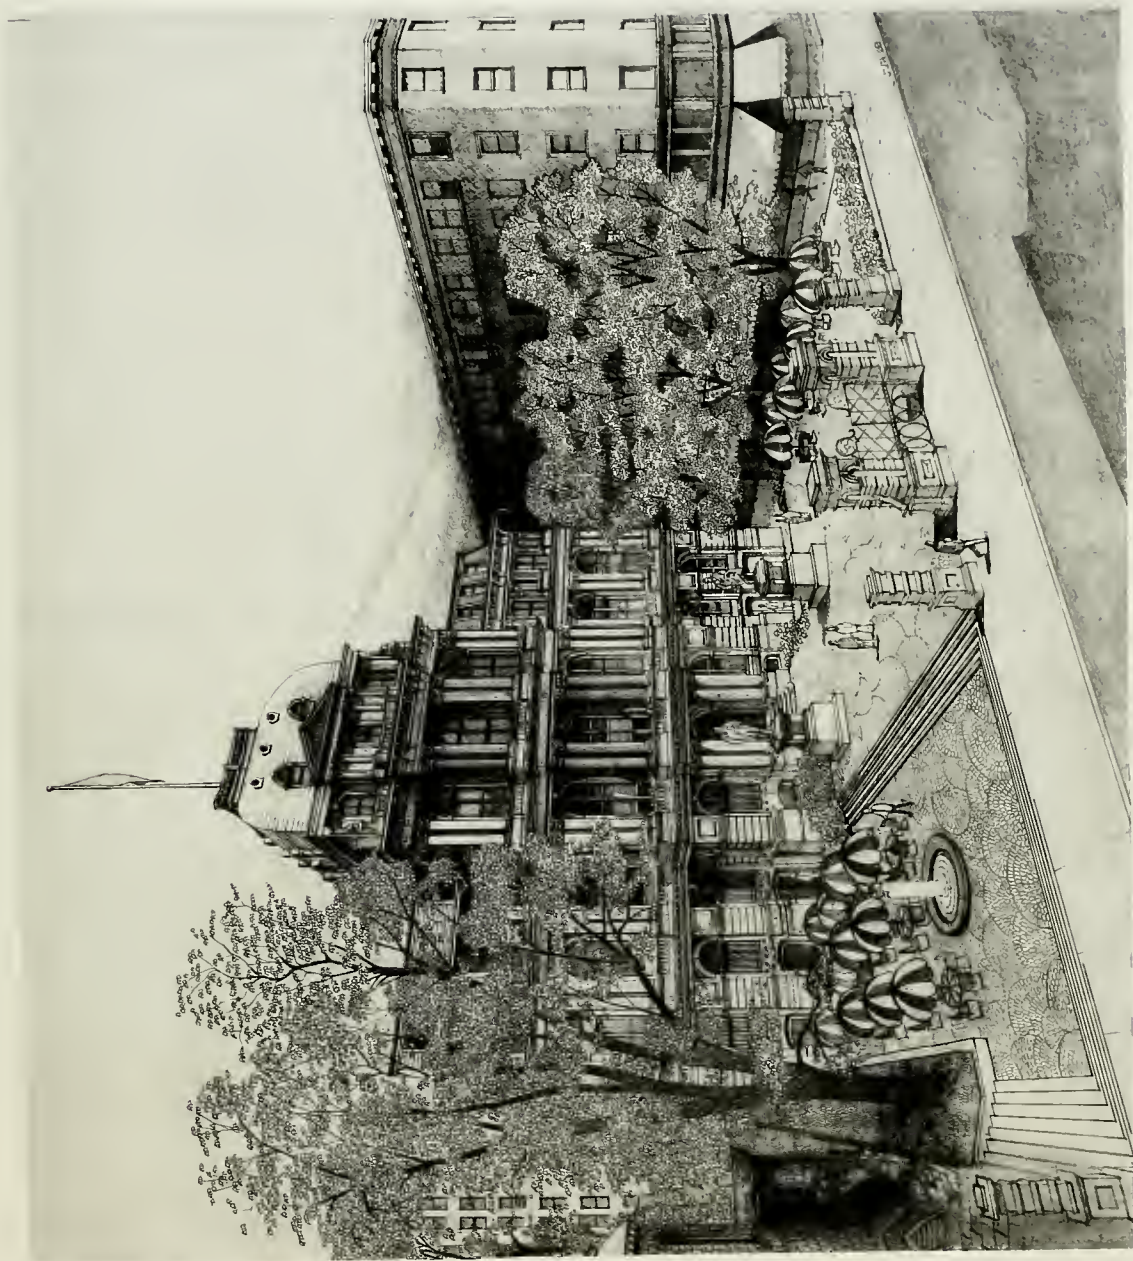

"The Boston skyline is changing as we watch it, and a single decade has made the once familiar silhouette obsolete. Without new buildings there would be no New Boston, and every city must somehow be renewed or it fades and fails and soon decays. But new buildings are only a part of the story; without a memory of its history any great city is eventually impoverished. This is why Boston must take care that in acquiring its new vitality and beauty, a most precious past is not lost.

"The old City Hall represents a time and a mood which is now very nearly forgotten; it is a symbol of the grace and elegance that our fathers once knew and loved. As a City Hall it cannot meet contemporary needs, but as a building - of its own time and place - it should be preserved. Very few buildings should be saved as monuments, but new uses can be discovered if we are ingenious enough. The Old Corner Book Store is an example of what can be done, and Faneuil Hall with its enduring meat stalls is another. If we take the time and the thought, old Boston and new Boston can live and flourish side by side, not in any competition or disharmony, but as a single city worthy of our affections.

"Boston can live without the old City Hall, but it should not have to. It has a right to its memories, and this is one too precious to be lightly set aside. It can be the test of just how much we care."

Msgr. Francis J. Lally
